Buying a home is a huge responsibility, and your largest financial commitment of the home buying process is the down payment. However, many home buyers find themselves mystified about the basics of a down payment. Below, we clear up the mystery!

What is a Down Payment?

When you purchase a home you will need a mortgage from a lender to buy it. The lender will expect you to place a certain amount of money down toward the home before they will finance the rest. The amount that you put down on the home is called the down payment.

How Can I Come Up With a Down Payment?

This is where your home purchase should really begin—managing your finances and saving up for a down payment. Because a down payment is generally a larger amount than most people have lying around, you may have to save up for months or even years.

Can I Use Cash Gifts as a Down Payment?

Yes, but there are certain restrictions. A cash gift can only be used as a down payment if the gift comes from a relative or live-in partner, and only if the source of the gift can be documented.

How Much Down Payment Do I Need?

The amount required to secure your mortgage loan is dependent on many things. Although a down payment of 10–20 % has become standard, many lenders will accept down payments between 3–10 % as well.
